Long Lake Main article: Long Lake (oil sands) The Long Lake project in Athabasca Oil Sands was started in 2001, as a 50/50 partnership between Nexen and Opti Canada. ^ Malbeuf, Jamie (April 18, 2019). Filed by the original October 7, 2019. The proven reserves on the Long Lake site are 310 000 000 of Bble [18]. In 2017 the site produced about 41,000 barrels per day (6,500 m3 / d) of bitumen [19]. The Long Lake site has had a troubled story, including the almost failure of Opti in 2011 (with Nexen who increased its property share at 65% and at the end of 100%), [20] a significant spillage of Oil in 2015 [21] and an explosion in 2016 that caused two deaths and permanent closure of the upgrade [19] [22] in 2018, Nexen announced an expansion project from 400 million dollars, which should start the Production at the end 2020. [19] Marketing Nexen also has an Energy Marketing Division that trades and market crude oil, natural gas, natural liquid gas and electricity energy and third parties. As of February 2013, Nexen has assumed responsibility for managing approximately $8 billion of CNOOC Limited assets located throughout North and Central America. Founded in 1973 by Saskatchewan Democratic Party Premier Allan Blakeney, Saskoil was privatized in 1986 by Progressive Conservative Premier Grant Devine. In 2000, the company collaborated with the Ontario Teachers' Pension Plan to repurchase the shares of Occidental Petroleum[6]. The new independent company changed its name to Nexen and moved to the former headquarters of the NOVA Corporation, now known as the Nexen Building[7]. Acquisition by CNOOC Limited In July 2012, CNOOC Limited, a major Beijing-based subsidiary of CNOOC, announced its intention to acquire Nexen for $15.1 billion.[8] The proposal was accepted by shareholders in September under the leadership of interim director Kevin Reinhart, who is a member of the company[9] but it has been the subject of important public and political debate in Canada.[10][11] Prime Minister Stephen Harper approved the deal in December 2012, but at the same time announced stricter guidelines for foreign acquisitions of Canadian oil sands companies.[12] The acquisition closed in February 2013, representing the largest foreign acquisition ever made by China.[13] Nex ordinary shareholders Nexen's preferred shareholders received cash proceeds of $26.50 without interest, while Nexen's preferred shareholders received cash proceeds of $26. accrued and unpaid without interest[4]. In April 2014, Fang Zhi replaced Kevin Reinhart as managing director of the firm[14] Two years after operation, in 2015, about 14% of company' workforce Calgary and 40 in the industry) was fired in a move that raised concerns about Chinese ownership, but which at the time was consistent with the layoffs of other companies in the industry in response to the global depression in oil prices[14]. The Nexen name disappeared from both a legal and practical point of view on December 31, 2018 and has since become known as CNOOC Petroleum North America ULC[15]. Concurrently and with the same effective date, the affiliates and affiliates of Nexen changed both their corporate names and their corporate names. Starting in 2013, the program includes three growth strategies[update]: oil sands and shale gas in Western Canada, conventional exploration and development primarily in the North Sea, off West Africa, and deep-water exploration in the Gulf of Mexico[4]. The Nexen Building in Calgary Nexen was founded in 1971 as Canadian Occidental Petroleum (CanOxy), and was 80% owned by Occidental Petroleum, a Los Angeles-based oil company.
